THM Seminar
Theological Hermeneutics
Spring 2006
Dr. Payne

Course Description: This is a graduate seminar designed to analyze the topic of theological methodology in terms of a hermeneutical perspective. This subject is one of the most significant topics to emerge in the contemporary theological discussion. I have selected several of the most important works to read and discuss. Our objectives are as follows: 1) To better understand the hermeneutical nature of theological method; 2) To explore the history of theological methodology and hermeneutics; and 3) To analyze a current example of theological methodology.

Course Texts:

Course Assignments/Requirements:

The student(s) will be responsible to read the assigned texts. The student(s) will be responsible to make presentations to the class on assigned portions of the above texts. The student(s) will produce one research paper to be presented at the end of the semester. (20 pages in length) This will be due the last day of class.