- 5 All Jacob's family lodged in Canaan;
 God changed their lives there with a famine.
 Joseph had been sold off, a slave,
 jailed, falsely maligned, lost for years,
 until God providentially
 made Pharaoh set poor Joseph free.
- 6 The king of Egypt leaned on God's slave,
 made Joseph chief lord of his nation!
 Princes were bound by his decree,
 wise men agreed—what irony!
 God's people lived as welcomed guests,
 thrived better than their gentile hosts.
- *7 But unleashed hate pressed down the LORD's folk;
 Moses and Aaron then were chosen
 to execute most fearful plagues,
 curbing revolt against God's word:
     pitch dark, and water turned to blood,
     fish dead and frogs in Pharaoh's bed.
     God spoke, and horseflies swarmed ahead!
     Hail raining down instead of bread,
     grasshoppers hopped, increasing dread;
     God killed their firstborn sons all dead;
 God rescued Israel from the foe;
 Egypt was glad to see them go.
- 8 God hung a cloud to lead them safely;
 his fiery pillar guided nightly.
 When they complained, he dropped them quail,
 water gushed out from solid rock!
 His manna answered desert prayers:
 God kept his oath to faithful heirs.
- 9 Exodus meant pure celebration:
 the LORD's elect gained liberation!
 God gave his folk rich heathen lands,
 put treasures in his people's hands,
 that they might demonstrate God's grace
 alive before his steadfast face.

**Stanza 7 may be sung either with or without the list of plagues.
 When singing the entire text, repeat the fourth melodic phrase six times.*
